The Fassitt House may have belonged to Thomas Fassitt, who was instrumental in building the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal in the early 19th century. The building is a good Federal brick house, five bays long and two bays deep with an "A" roof. There is a two bay, three story wing with pent roof sloping toward the back of the house. The single most outstanding feature of the exterior is a fine strapwork cornice on the south facade of the main building. The interior is divided into a central stair hall with a large single room to the east and two rooms to the west, all containing simple federal woodwork and trim.
